

Emory Pituitary Center

The Emory Pituitary Center's physician team is world-renowned for its expertise in the treatment of pituitary tumors and other conditions associated with the pituitary gland. While most medical centers that offer surgical options to treat pituitary tumors have performed approximately 300 of these procedures, the Emory team has performed more than 1,400 to date.

At the Emory Pituitary Center, patients have access to state-of-the-art equipment, including the latest diagnostic imaging scanners and advanced surgical technology. In fact, Emory is one of only four centers in the country that offers access to a 3-D endoscope for the surgical removal of pituitary tumors. This cutting-edge device greatly improves the surgeon's ability to remove the entire tumor in a single procedure, thereby minimizing errors and decreasing the chance that patients will have to undergo multiple procedures.

At the initial visit, patients are evaluated by both an endocrinologist and a neurosurgeon, if appropriate. The multidisciplinary team then helps create a patient-centered treatment plan that coordinates care among multiple Emory specialties and departments.
